AVP.Q: How do I get the location of current frame in cellDidEndScrolling animation block I have a cell and a button in a cell. when clicking the button, the cell returns to the original position. I set the animation of the cellDidEndScrolling to newCell.frame, but it seems to return the animation block to frame 0 instead of current frame. I have tried to print the indexPath to see if it matches but it doesn't. How do I get the current frame index? func tableView(tableView: UITableView, cellDidEndScrollingAnimation block: () -> Void) { print("cellDidEndScrolling animation block") let indexPath = tableView.indexPathForCell(cell) cell = tableView.cellForRowAtIndexPath(indexPath) newCell.frame = CGRectMake(cell.frame.origin.x, cell.frame.origin.y, cell.frame.size.width, cell.frame.size.height) } A: I think the issue is in your return statement. If you look at the function signature it says it returns Void. The cellDidEndScrollingAnimation block is defined as taking a Void which means it will return nothing, and then call the cell that is passed in. So if you wanted to know the current cell's frame, you would do something like this. func tableView(tableView:
