Low anterior resection syndrome (LARS) remains one of the most common postoperative complications of low anterior resection for rectal cancer. The aim of this study was to evaluate the safety and effectiveness of conservative treatment for LARS. Between April 1998 and December 2003, 129 patients with LARS after low anterior resection for rectal cancer were treated conservatively in our institute. Postoperative intestinal function was evaluated by examining the following: (1) the frequency of defecation, (2) the stool properties, (3) the abdominal cramps, (4) the defecation capacity, (5) the extent of stoma granulation, and (6) the volume and frequency of peristomal fluid. Of 129 patients with LARS, 116 patients (91%) were cured by conservative treatment, and 13 patients (9%) who complained of moderate pain and/or slight discomfort and had larger stoma openings (mean diameter, 11 mm) were considered to be surgical candidates. Of the 13 surgical candidates, four patients had recurrent tumors at the splenic flexure, and 9 patients had severe granulation at their stoma. All the 12 patients underwent intersphincteric resection, and two patients had recurrent tumors at the splenic flexure. Conservative treatment of LARS was effective in 116 patients, and conservative treatment tended to provide good long-term outcome.Q: Access individual form elements in custom widget class I'm making a custom widget for a site I'm developing. I have a class called MyWidget that extends FormWidget. I added some code to the FormWidget to get a new class of FormField (which I'm calling MyFormField) and added some code to allow each form element to be a MyFormField When the form is submitted, the data from the MyFormField is saved to the database. My problem is that in my MyWidget, I need to access the data from each of the MyFormField's to save the data to the database. The thing is, FormWidget gives me a reference to the Form object, but MyFormField doesn't have a reference to the Form object. This results in a NullPointerException 2edc1e01e8
