What's New In?

These figures make a picture of the clock. The figures are running around the clock, they touch each other, they overlap and stick to each other, they disappear and reappear, they fly, they fall to the ground and come again, they slide, they climb, they fall, they are in motion. When a figure passes through another figure it changes colour and forms, for example, if two figures touch each other one of them turns into another shape, and they can even exchange figures. Screenshots: And the crazy clock is a screensaver for all screens! In this screensaver the figure changes more quickly than in the traditional screensavers. Requirements: You only need a graphic card with DirectX, a mouse and a desktop. How to install: 1. Run installers.exe. 2. There are no files inside the installers. 3. Go to the folder with the created.scr files and double click on clock.scr. 4. The installation is complete, just restart your computer. Notes: The.scr files are too big to include in the archive. They are only 50kb. You can download them from here: I don't really like the name. Maybe we can use it, but I'll ask users to rename them before giving it to them. Technical information: Both the Figure and the Figures' Library have been developed in Free Pascal, by me. On the windows side it uses the following resources: - 'win32api.dll' for the graphic part. - 'MUI.dll' for the main user interface. - 'Dwm.dll' for a very useful function. - 'Rpmsg.dll' for some 'thread messages'. - 'Shcore.dll' for some 'windows api calls'. Thanks: The basic idea of this screensaver was inspired by 'Nitrogen', and to [jarednunez] (see for the main figure idea. And to [iandan] (for the'speed up' idea and for the library code. Credits: The original idea came from a suggestion of 'Giovanni Vigna'. And I'm very sorry for not having thanked him earlier. Tanks to [for writing the [pcc] function. Thanks to the timekeepers of [for the
