What I am trying to do is take a input box with a few spaces, and output it with no spaces at all. Basically, I am validating a series of text areas and each text area is supposed to only have exactly that many spaces. If the user starts a text area and spews out a bunch of messed up text, the function loops through and removes the excess spaces. It's an exercise I am working on in JavaScript. Here is what I have so far: `function removeSpaces(text){ var spaces = RegExp(/[s]+/g); var newText = ""; text.replace(spaces, ""); return newText; }` So far, it's not working at all. Any help would be greatly appreciated. A: You should use `String.replace()`: `text.replace(/s/g, "");` Q: c++ multi-threading - check if data is updated if a thread is sleeping Suppose I am a "producer" - the producer is a class that manages the setting of a data field in a mutexed manner. It gets accessed by the "consumer" and the consumer can take as long as he wishes to wait. Every time the consumer is done, I want the producer to be notified that his data has been updated. Unfortunately my producer doesn't have a way of synchronizing with the consumer, and therefore I would like some way of checking if the data has been updated. I also don't want to force the consumer to wait, so this should be done in one thread, and the `setData()` can still be called from other threads. Is there a "correct" way to do this? I am concerned about false-positives, race conditions, or...? I haven't seen any tutorials on dealing with this kind of problem when using multiple threads and I feel that I am missing something.... I know about synchronization primitives, but it feels like using them is not the only way to do it - I am not sure what I am missing. Thank you in advance! A: I would
